User Review - Flag as inappropriate This is essential reading for Nautical Archeology students. It tells us a lot about anchors used mid nineteenth century. G Cotsell was the Master Smith at the Chatham Royal Navy Dock Yard, supervising the construction of thousands of ships anchors every year. He knew more about ship’s anchors than anybody yet the Admiralty refused to let him or his ideas be ...

A stockless anchor (or "patent anchor") is a streamlined derivation of the traditional Admiralty anchor used aboard large ships. Patented in England in 1821, it eliminated the stock of the Admiralty, making it both easier to handle and stow. Though it did not hold as well as an Admiralty, the trade-off proved acceptable and the stockless anchor became widely popular, and remains so today.
